Laura Corbelli*

This special issue of Ricerca Psicoanalitica originates from the intention to collect and share the contributions presented by SIPRe members, students, and working groups during the IFPS (International Federation of Psychoanalytic Societies) Forum, held in Bergamo in October 2024.

We believe that the impressive participation of SIPRe members greatly contributed to the scientific richness of the event, along with the wide range of topics addressed in each contribution. The ideas shared provided meaningful opportunities for exchange, reflection, and comparison with colleagues both nationally and internationally. We therefore felt the need to gather these contributions and make them accessible to foster continued insight, dialogue, and thoughtful reflection.

I would like to express my sincere gratitude to all the authors whose valuable contributions and dedicated efforts have made this publication possible, as well as to those who contributed conceptually, even though they did not author an article.

Finally, I would like to extend my heartfelt thanks to the editorial team, and in particular to Francesca Piazzalunga, for enthusiastically embracing and making this project feasible, and to the SIPRe representatives for IFPS at the time of the forum, Daniela De Robertis and Roberta Resega, who officially open this issue with insights and reflections that underscore its significance.

We hope that this reading will contribute to the ongoing dialogue and serve as a source of further inspiration.

Enjoy your reading.
